

ANTI-BULLYING PROJECT

PRIZE WINNING PROJECT NEEDS VOLUNTEERS TO CONTINUE THIS VITAL WORK

The University of Bolton won a national award for its children's anti-bullying programme in 2006. The university was presented with the Higher Education Active Community trophy for the best Outstanding Project Award. This anti-bullying project was able to make youngsters aware of the potential effects of bullying. The project reduced the incidents of bullying, ultimately enhancing the classroom environment. 2008 will be the third year that we have undertaken this vital work in local schools.

If you think that you could work for a couple of hours each week for ten weeks delivering the Children's Safety Education Foundation's anti-bullying programme to year 5 (age 9) children in a local primary school and would like to find out more then contact June Clayton. Full training and support will be given and all teaching resources are provided. Successful applicants for this volunteering placement will work in small groups at primary schools in Bolton.

This is a wonderful opportunity for any student who is thinking of teaching as a career choice and would like to gain classroom experience whilst delivering a proven and valuable programme of education.
