The University of Bolton is a “Teaching Intensive, Research Informed” higher education institution whose distinctive high quality, student-focussed, undergraduate and postgraduate programmes attract students from all over the world.

Our staff are at the heart of everything we do: they are highly qualified and experienced in their fields, supporting their teaching practice by carrying out quality research and engaging in continuous professional development. Staff pride themselves on being outstanding professionals that provide excellent learning, teaching and applied research and support in the provision of custom-designed, industry led courses in numerous subject areas.

The key duties of the post holders will be to contribute to the teaching and delivery of undergraduate and taught postgraduate programmes in the area of Psychology including the academic and personal support of students. In addition, you will be expected to contribute to the student recruitment and admissions of programmes in the subject area.

Applicants should have experience in forensic psychology in practice and/or applied forensic research outputs. They should be aware of current developments in the field and have experience working with offenders/victims/criminal justice agencies. A first degree is essential to this role, as is a relevant post graduate degree and preferably a teaching qualification. Please see relevant job description for each of the roles.

A commitment to undertaking a PhD and membership of the Higher Education Academy is an essential requirement of the role.

The successful candidate should demonstrate a practical awareness of current developments in Psychology education as well as being able to facilitate the creation and maintenance of a range of links between courses and the range of employers in the sector.

Please indicate your preferred role on your application.
