The University of Bolton prides itself on being a teaching intensive, research-informed institution and we have received formal recognition at national level under the Teaching Excellence Framework.

The Centre for Contemporary Coronial Law is a pioneering research and professional education centre, seeking to promote good coronial law and practice.

Initially established primarily as a CPD providing branch of the School of Law at the University of Bolton in 2016, aimed at teaching the fundamentals of coronial law to professionals who interact with the coronial system, the Centre has since flourished into a department in its own right, which is currently developing a number of higher education programmes in various areas.

We are looking to recruit professionals from the coronial system and related fields and/or industries to grow our bank of VHTs across all fields relating to the investigation of deaths and Coroners' inquests including both legal and medical areas.

The key duties of the role-holder will be to contribute to the delivery of key modules on CPD and postgraduate programmes.
