The University of Bolton prides itself on being a teaching-intensive, research-informed institution and we have received formal recognition at national level under the Teaching Excellence Framework.

The School of Law brings together Law and Crime and Criminal Justice. We offer undergraduate, postgraduate, and professional legal education across a broad range of disciplines.

Our teaching staff have strong academic and professional backgrounds and use this experience to develop industry-ready courses, supported by a huge range of additional opportunities such as work placements, live projects in the Legal Advice Centre, and a programme of high-profile guest speakers.

With links to local and national law firms, we are dedicated to offering practical-focused courses that prepare graduates to take their place in the legal sector.

The School of Law is undergoing a period of exciting growth and is now seeking to recruit individuals to contribute to the delivery of the core foundational modules (qualifying law degree modules) and optional modules.

We are looking to appoint passionate and enthusiastic individuals with availability to teach from January 2023 onwards. The role will provide an opportunity for an early career academic or qualified solicitor or barrister to gain a wide range of experience in learning, teaching and assessment practice.
