

HOUSE OF LORDS
say is this, that measured mu
e himself ac ented, the side, the a re

My Lords, the

[illegible]

HALSBURY:—
Cords, I am
I adore
day

ALSBURY:—
words, I am of the same opinion. I should only t I adopt the words of Lindley L. J., who says, "with dant could have repudiated the deed in the hs after he came of age I do not care to discuss hold that he repudiated within a reasonable use, if he chooses, to oblige of his choice, in ay; if he takes any steps se before he took any steps garded as a reasonable time.

A. C.

to ask u
holding."

LORD MACNAGHTEN:—
My Lords, I agree. It seems to me that which no reasonable sufficient age and intelligence a infant or a man of full age to must be treated as a man of full age to executes; and knowing full age to either Mr. Martin therefor want in question. Silbert ence on question. Silbert tion which grows
social industry, gro-
an en-

LORD MORRIS

My Lords, I

LORD SHAND:—
My Lords, I concur
reasonable.

My Lords, I am also of the same opinion. It seems to me reasonable to require of a minor that himself acquainted after attaining his majority he should make rights of others held in the minority, and terms and effect of such deeds as he has executed or put to have lost, if he fails to do so must thereby be known to him at least, and time been affected and as the Justice may know that he had cast right of repudiation. Lord Justice Kay does not state that But he knew the settlement the correct present way of stating mind, or 'I did not know' a case of settling property, 'settlement the' receiving the member' or 'It was now, 'I did not know' a case of settling property, 'settlement the' receiving the would be a more correct present way of stating mind, or 'I did not know' a case of settling property, 'settlement the' receiving the dence, 'that there was in this of settling mind, or 'I did not know' a case of settling property, 'settlement the' receiving the settle after-acquired property, 'settlement the' receiving the the settlement; he knew he was receiving the

But he knew the

U. L. (C.B.) 267
1892
EDWARDS
CARPENTER

